PREFACE.

THE present volume begins with a long and very minute "Report," by the Lord Mayor, of all the Aliens dwelling in the City of London and in Southwark, in November, 1571. It is dated only a few months after the elaborate return of May, 1571, printed at the end of the first volume, yet the names and descriptions of the foreigners differ so much from those given in the earlier return that it was found quite impossible to avoid printing it in full.

It sets out the countries or places of birth of the strangers and their wives, their occupations, how long they had been in England, which of them had become denizens, the number and names of their children, and to what churches they belonged, that is to say, whether to the Dutch, the French, the Italian, or the English Church; or, if they were not members of any church, the fact is carefully stated.

These particulars are recorded under the names of the wards, parishes, or liberties in which they resided. Many of the strangers are stated to have come here "for religion" or "for persecution's sake"; others "to seek work," and others "to see the country," or "their friends"; but some had come over when children or "very young," and had, therefore, been brought up in England. The total number was 4,631, including 37 Scots. Comparing this total with those of earlier returns it would appear that the strangers were still on the increase.

In the following month, December, 1571, returns were made of all the strangers dwelling in the "sixteen hamlets" and liberties adjoining the City, but there is no return for Westminster. The localities included are St. Katherine's near the Tower, Shoreditch, Finsbury, Golden Lane, Whitecross Street, Grub Street, St. Giles's in the Fields, the Minories, Poplar, Ratcliffe, Blackwall, Limehouse, Halliwell, Whitechapel, East Smithfield, and the Tower. The particulars given in these returns are not nearly so minute as those in the City report. The total number was 1,972. Here again there may have been an increase, but as we do not know the number in Westminster, it is impossible to say for certain. The two totals of 4,631 and 1,972, added together, make 6,603.

In February, 1572, the Lord Mayor arrested "certain strangers" by order of the Privy Council, apparently because they were suspected of belonging to "no church". They were sent to the Bishop of London, who reported the results of their examinations to the Council.

Another "book" of the strangers in the City and suburbs was drawn up in 1573, but only the totals have been preserved, the grand total being 7,143. Again Westminster does not appear to be comprised, and thus it is evident that there had been an increase of 540 in two years in the rest of the metropolitan area.

From that date till 1576 nothing of great importance has been discovered. For the latter year there are several Subsidy Rolls, and as every stranger who had no goods was at least compelled to pay something for his poll, we might have expected to be able to ascertain whether the Aliens were increasing or diminishing, though young children would not be taxable; but the comparative fewness of their numbers, perhaps about 2,000, makes it quite clear that some of the rolls of this assessment have been lost, especially as the extant rolls include a few localities near London which were not comprised in the previous returns. Southwark, however, is not represented. As far as they go, these rolls may serve for the purpose of comparing names, and of ascertaining whether particular persons were still resident, or had departed.

A manuscript at the Dutch Church, Austin Friars, gives the names of the members of that church who, between 1576 and 1591, contributed to the support of their students at the University of Cambridge "and elsewhere". The contributors would be the more substantial men of the Dutch community, and hence this record will probably be interesting to many of their descendants. We are indebted to Mr. W. J. C. Moens for these lists, which we have carefully collated with the originals.

An important return of strangers in the City of London and the "precincts" has been assigned by Strype to the year 1581, but only the totals are preserved, and they are much smaller than those of 1573. The number in the City was only 2,442, and in the precincts only 1,661, or less, as the figures have not been added properly, and the sum total is given as 4,047. If the date is correct, there had been a great falling off in the course of the preceding eight years.

In August, 1582, another assessment for a Subsidy was made in the City, and a large number of names is returned in the rolls, but once more it is doubtful whether they are complete.

During the Mayoralty of Thomas Blanck, in 1582 and 1583, a series of important returns of strangers was made to him by the Aldermen of the City Wards, and by the Masters and Wardens of the City Companies. They are undated, but, like the three corresponding returns for the suburbs, were probably drawn up in April or May, 1583, as may also be inferred from the summary given in a State Paper, on p. 376. All these important returns are preserved among the Cecil MSS. at Hatfield, and were kindly lent by the Marquis of Salisbury to the Huguenot Society, as stated in the first volume.

The Aldermen's "answers" to the Lord Mayor's precepts specify the names and trades of the strangers, the names of their wives, the numbers of their children, whether they were denizens, and whether they attended church or not; but it is not stated how long they had been in England, nor why they came here, as is done in the returns of 1571.

The Companies' answers (pp. 305-14) set out the names of the masters and journeymen who had been admitted or licensed to exercise the respective trades, and in some cases curious particulars are given. Several of the Companies, on various grounds, complained of certain strangers, but legal proceedings had been taken against only one of them. On the other hand, the strangers had sued one of the Companies at law for many years, at great expense. Other Companies returned the names of persons who persisted in trading without licence, but it was admitted that some of these paid "quarterage" like the English freemen.

Another list of strangers in the City and suburbs, merely giving their nationalities and trades, also among the Cecil MSS., is reproduced on pp. 314-52, having been assigned to the year 1583; but as the names do not agree with those in the returns just noticed, it may be of a different date.

The three returns for the suburbs, made in April and May, 1583, are drawn up in different forms, but all of them give useful information. According to the State Paper before-mentioned, the total number of strangers at that date in London was 3,537, and in the suburbs 1,604, in all 4,141. Thus the aliens were considerably fewer in 1583 than in 1573, but had increased a trifle since the return of 1581.

The next important list is derived from one of the Dutch Church Registers, and is dated 1585. It gives the names of all the members of that church, and shows the parishes in London and Southwark where they resided. Of the same year is a "view" of the numerous strangers in the Liberty of St. Martin's-le-Grand, from a Lansdowne MS.

For returns during many subsequent years we are almost entirely dependent on the Subsidy Rolls, but there is a useful list of the Dutch householders in 1588, from the archives of the Dutch Church. Another Lansdowne MS. furnishes the numbers of strangers living in the City Wards in 1593, the total being 4,300, who employed 1,493 Englishmen. As the suburbs are not included, it is clear that there had been a large increase since 1583; in fact, there would be almost as many strangers as there were in 1571.

An important return of members of the Dutch Church residing in London and Southwark is dated 1594.

Towards the end of the Preface to the preceding volume some remarks were made on the different ways in which the various classes of English artificers were affected by the influx of so many foreigners. This subject is further illustrated by the returns made by many of the City Companies in 1583, before noticed; and they are epitomised here, in order that the particulars given in them may be the more easily comprehended:—

Weavers . . .	73 foreign brothers and 80 journeymen, admitted.
Haberdashers . . .	9 strangers, licensed to make felts.
Scriveners . . .	3 notaries, not licensed.
Dyers . . .	2 foreign brothers and 2 journeymen, admitted.
Merchant Taylors . . .	1 stranger, licensed.
Basket-makers . . .	3 strangers, not licensed, but paying quarterage.
Stationers . . .	6 foreign brothers, admitted, but some had left England.
Cordwainers . . .	2 poor strangers, not licensed.
Plumbers . . .	1 stranger, not licensed.
Brewers . . .	2 strangers, licensed at the request of a Privy Councillor.
Pewterers . . .	1 stranger, not licensed, and had been sued in the Exchequer.
Lorimers . . .	4 strangers, not licensed.
Painter-stainers . . .	3 strangers, not licensed, but paying quarterage.
Turners . . .	2 strangers, as above.
Blacksmiths . . .	3 strangers, admitted under letters patent; 13 not licensed.
Goldsmiths . . .	14 strangers, not licensed, but sworn to work truly.
Embroiderers . . .	2 strangers, licensed.

Barbers and Surgeons	5 strangers, allowed to practice surgery.
Tallow-chandlers	8 strangers, not licensed.
Cutlers	6 strangers, not licensed.
Upholders	3 strangers, selling by retail, but not licensed.
Vintners	4 strangers, not licensed.
Joiners	100 strangers outside the City, not licensed; they had sued the Company at law for admission to the freedom.
Freemasons	4 strangers, not licensed, but paying quarterage to the Joiners' Company.
Glasiers	15 strangers, masters and journeymen, not licensed, but paying quarterage.
Armourers	9 strangers; viz. , 5 masters, "suffered," and paying quarterage; 4 journeymen, "admitted," but paying nothing.
Girdlers	2 strangers, not licensed by the Company, but allowed by letters patent.

Many famous and well known names may be discovered by turning up the references given in the accompanying table of Trades and Occupations, under the heads of painters, stone carvers and cutters, engravers, musicians, instrument makers, doctors, physicians, surgeons, apothecaries, notaries, scribes, school-masters, armourers, cutlers, gun makers, goldsmiths, jewellers, stationers, printers, typefounders, clock makers, glass makers, lace makers, merchants, and factors. An index to localities in and near London will be found at the end of volume.

Since the publication of the first volume the missing "Certificate" for 1548, quoted by Strype and Burn, has been discovered, out of place, in the second division of the Lansdowne Collection, No. 202; it forms a large book, similar to the volumes among the State Papers of 1571. The return is a very elaborate one, and it is proposed to print it at the end of the third volume of this work, along with some other recently discovered records of early dates.

LONDON, March, 1902.

In re the Bakers' Company see Sylvia Thrupp's A SHORT HISTORY OF THE WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF BAKERS OF LONDON London (Bakers' Coy) 1934 reviewed LTIS For 15 Mch 34

The method of arranging the price of bread was elaborate and curious. It was calculated on the cost of wheat, to which was added a fixed allowance for the baker's working expenses. The price being thus fixed, it did not vary with the fluctuations in the cost of wheat. As that cost rose or declined so the weight of a loaf diminished or increased. It was in fixing the allowance that the chief difficulty arose. It was fixed for long periods; costs changed; the value of money changed; the bakers continually complained that the allowance was not enough. "Working expenses" is the phrase used by Miss Thrupp, but it was in fact both working and living expenses for the baker and his family. A baker's budget of expenses prepared in the seventeenth century included an item of seven shillings a week for the children's food, assuming that "a common man hath not lesse than three or foure children."

The attempts to prevent unauthorized competition seem never to have been entirely successful. "Foreigners" from outside the City were allowed to sell bread in certain markets and at certain times. The chief complaint against them was that their bread was under-weight. It was the competition by non-bakers from within the City which the Company found it difficult to prevent. That innkeepers, who were allowed to bake their own bread, should have been tempted to surreptitious trade in bread is not surprising; but even such unexpected craftsmen as goldsmiths, blacksmiths, saddlers and clothmakers encroached on the monopoly of the bakers. Within the Company discipline was strict; fines were frequent; good manners as well as good bread were expected. Clamant advertising (it was done by horn and bell) was discouraged, not only because the public did not like it but because it was unfair to the bakers who did not use horns and bells. New inventions were suppressed for fear that they either might throw men out of employment or might jeopardize the businesses of the smaller men who could not afford them. Miss Thrupp sums it up, "Brotherhood not business efficiency or get-rich-quick was the motto of the Company."

in the Middle Ages the system worked smoothly; but in the sixteenth century, when London was growing, there was serious and prolonged trouble between the City and the Company because of the scarcity of bread. Miss Thrupp gives a graphic account of the struggle. The City set up municipal baking-ovens for the poor and established municipal granaries. The bakers refused to take over the municipal supplies. Not until they were threatened with loss of the franchise did they give way. In the end victory was divided, but the bakers had the larger share. They were left to buy their own wheat, but the municipal ovens remained. That struggle showed very clearly where the system was weak, but it still had over two centuries of life before it. When at last it came to an end, manufacture on a large scale, with machinery, improved transport and unrestricted competition, ensured the sufficient supply at a moderate price which for centuries it had been the aim of the City's authorities to ensure by their control of prices. The tradesman had lost the security which his Company had obtained for him, but in place of it he had opportunities, if he were successful, of wealth impossible under the old system.

Hans Peniable, of Andwerp, from whence he camme about iij weekes last past, beinge a goldsmith, and came hether to seeke worck, and also for religion. But hetherto he hath not joyned him self to anie church, because he is not yet setteled, nor can tell certenlie where to haue worck. He saith he will remaine here if he can geate anie worck, and ioyne him self to somme church, orelles meanith to departe into Fraunce.

The parsons aforesaid are monished to appere vpon Monday next, at one of the clock.

Vndecimo die mensis Februarij 1571.

Hans Peniable appered this day, and saith that he hath gotten worck here, and meaneth here to continewe and joyne him self to the Dutch Church. The said Hans is inioyned to enter him self a member of the said Church before Sunday next, and to bringe certificath ther of by the subscripcion of the minster ther, before that day, to the Bissshop of London.

Nicholas Placot appered, whoe is inioyned as before, and to bringe certificath from M^r Cosen, pastour of the French Church before Sond[ay] next.

Peter Senvay }
Symon Logier } saie that they will departe the realme within this month.
Gwy Barnard, Wallwon, not in towen as yet.

xv^{jo} die mensis Februarij 1571.

Nicholas Placot, accordinge to the monicion aforesaid, brought certificath this day from M^r Cosen, pastour of the French Church, that he hath joyned him self a member of that Church.

The said Hans Pennyable hath not brou[gh]t certificath according to monicion gevon him.

STOW'S SURVEY OF LONDON, BY STRYPE, VOL. II., p. 404.

1576.

"Among the persons named in a list of the year 1576, are John Houblowe and Gyllam Teyler mentioned. And, in another, are the names of John Hubland and Peter Hubland, miswrit in both places, I make no doubt, by the English scribes."

DUTCH CHURCH MS., ENTITLED "STUDENTS' FUND".

Names of those Members of the Dutch Church, London, who engaged to subscribe sums annually for the support and education of selected Students of their Congregation at Cambridge University or elsewhere; from 1576 to 1591.

* * * So ist dat de dienaers deser Nederduytscher Ghemeynte binnen Londen, metten anderen kereken onser natie in desen koninekrycke hier ouer rypelick ghehandelt, hebbende te samen voor goet, ia gantsch noodlich ghevonden hebben dat elcke ghemeynte na hare vermoghen hier-in soude voorsien; Ende hebben derhaluen voorgenomen, boven de propositien

STOW'S SURVEY OF LONDON, BY STRYPE, Vol. II., p. 300.*

Petition of the Shoemakers against the Alien Cordwainers, October, 1578.

"The free Shoemakers, in the month of October, 1578, put up another Petition to the Lord-Treasurer, setting forth their case, viz. : That there was an Order in the Star Chamber, in King Henry the Eighth's time, that all Strangers Artificers should be contributors as the King's natural subjects were ; and should come to the Halls, and take the oaths to be true to the King and his heirs ; of which sundry exemptions were made and sent to the several Companies in London ; and, among the rest, one to the Cordwainers. But that certain Strangers of that Art, as namely, Francis Gerers, Daniel Swarts, John Yong, Edward Tyson, Leonard Harman, and many others by their example, did not regard the said decree, nor the acts and laws of the Realm ; and, not contented with the Queen's charitable protection, did refuse to come to the Assembly, and obey and be governed as her Majesty's natural subjects," etc.
